

SUCCESS STORIES OF HOME CARE WORKERS

Job mobility has changed the lives of many home care workers in the European Union. Thanks to support policies and qualification recognition, numerous professionals have been able to improve their working conditions and develop their careers in different countries. Below are some inspiring stories.

1. Elena, from Romania to Germany: Stability and better conditions

Elena, a Romanian caregiver, decided to move to Germany in search of better opportunities. Through the EURES network, she found a job with a stable contract, a fair salary, and access to ongoing training. "I used to work without a permanent contract, but now I have job security and social benefits. I've also been able to improve my skills with courses funded by my employer," says Elena.

2. Miguel, from Spain to the Netherlands: Professional growth

Miguel worked long hours and low wages in Spain. Thanks to the Professional Qualifications Directive, he was able to validate his experience and access a position in the Netherlands with better pay and flexible hours. "The change has been incredible. I now have more time for my family and continue to learn from every experience," says Miguel.

3. Anna, from Poland to France: Training and specialization

Anna always wanted to specialize in caring for people with neurodegenerative diseases. In France, she found a training program supported by the European Social Fund that allowed her to obtain advanced certification. "Without the possibility of job mobility, I wouldn't have had access to this training. Now I can provide higher-quality care and have more professional opportunities," Anna explains.

IN SUMMARY

These testimonials demonstrate the positive impact of job mobility in the home care sector. With the support of EU policies, more and more workers can access better opportunities, fair working conditions, and professional development, which in turn improves the quality of the service they provide to those most in need.
